I, i', or at, n. Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant.—Johnson. By what contact of the organs is the consonant sound produced? -J. K.

I, vowel, has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e, it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus, field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e, it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o, makes a mingled sound, which approaches to the notion of a diphthoug, as oil, eoin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y. - Johnson. There is only one vowel sound in field, fe'ld. "Oi, oil, coin, approaches to the notion of a diphtneng." -Johnson. It does not "approach the notion;" but if touches the sound, "of a dipththong," for it is actually a full one, composed of a and e, both long, ae', ae'l, kae'n'.—J. K.
